Diploma for completion of the course
The PhD Supervision Process: Methods and Tools
March – May 2017

The course focuses on the relationship between PhD student and supervisor and covers models and possible actions related to:

- Supervision style
- Insights into your PhD students' own perspectives
- Active listening
- Different types of questions to be used in supervision
- Mutual expectations and collaboration agreement
- Feedback methods
- Cross-cultural dimensions in supervision
- Exchange of experiences with other supervisors

The course includes 3 days of participation, readings, individual exercises and group exercises and the total workload is 40 hours. Prior to course commencement, the participants prepare a short case from their own supervision, which is discussed among the participants. Between the first and the second course day participants practice active listening and between the second and the third course day a collaboration agreement is made together with a PhD student.
